The APAY Conference on Climate Change:
Youth working to combat climate change

The Conference on Climate Change of the Asia and Pacific Alliance of YMCAs was held during 21st to 23rd June 2016 at Chiang Mai YMCA, Thailand. The Conference was the final and concluding activity of our e-learning on Climate Change. The main objectives were to provide additional information on issues related to combating climate change that were not covered by the e-learning, to share and report on their e-learning action plans and to evaluate the e-learning on Climate Change and Tourism.

A total of thirty two participants including twenty two youths had participated at the conference. These participants represented the YMCAs of Bangladesh, China, India, Japan, Korea, Macau, Mongolia, Philippines, Sri Lanka, and Thailand. Two YMCA contact persons from Laos were also invited to participate in the Conference.

Ms. Patcharin Sugunnasil, Board Member of Chiang Mai YMCA inaugurated the conference, while Mr. Nam Boo Won, General Secretary of APAY delivered the welcome speech in the inauguration session.

The sessions of the conference started with morning devotions each day. Rev. Anucharn Siroros and Rev. Dr. Pradit Takerngrangsarit, President of the Christian Conference of Asia Foundation, led the morning devotions. This conference was a learning space for the participants on various issues of climate change. Ms. Annegret Zimmerman, representing Bread for the World, Germany gave an update on the Climate Change international negotiation process. Dr. Hope Antone in her sharing explained Climate Change from the Gender perspective. Dr. Chitchol Phalaraksh and Dr. Wasan Jompakdee from Chiang Mai University presented a talk on Climate Change and Food & Water Security and Mr. Duncan Chowdhury explained the UN Sustainable Development Goals in relation with Climate Change and Tourism.

The participants had also the opportunity to visit the Energy Learning Center at Sao Hin YMCA and gain practical knowledge on different aspects of environmental protection, about various types of energy we use in our daily life, energy efficient appliances and reusing and recycling materials.

The APAY had launched an online e-learning course on Climate Change last year. The APAY Youth Representatives who had successfully participated at the online e-learning course had been invited to participate at the conference. The conference was a good opportunity for the participants to effectively evaluate the process of the e-learning course, share their difficulties in pursuing their studies and the pros and cons of the present course. These feedbacks will be useful for APAY to streamline the e-learning course.

The youths also show-cased their youth oriented environmental action programs during the conference which they had accomplished in their respective YMCAs. APAY had also financially supported some of these programs.

On the final day of the conference, the participants were unanimous in expressing their commitment and conviction to combat against climate change and drew up programs in their own YMCAs for the mitigation and adaptation of climate change.

We thank Mr. Kohei Yamada, past General Secretary, for participating at the conference from Japan. Mr. Yamada was one of the mentors of the e-learning course along with Ms. Ianne Christine Aquino who also attended the conference from Philippines. Special thanks for Mr. Christian Fisher, Program Officer of Bread for the World and Ms. Annegret Zimmerman, Policy Advisor for Responsible Tourism and Mobility of Bread for the World for their accompaniment throughout the conference and expertise inputs on climate change. Mr. Nam Boo Won, General Secretary and Mr. Duncan Chowdhury, Executive Secretary of APAY also attended the conference while Mr. Chan Beng Seng, GATN Coordinator of APAY was overall responsible to organize the conference.

SOP Alumni in Indonesia Outline Future Plans

School of Peace (SOP) alumni in Indonesia held the annual meeting of their national forum from May 26 to 28 at Pesantren Yasina, an Islamic boarding school, in the small town of Cigombong Kabupaten Bogor in the province of West Java. Like previous meetings, the 10 SOP alumni who attended the meeting shared with each other about their work in Jakarta and the provinces of West Java, Central Java, Central Sulawesi and Papua. They also shared about recent issues in their communities, such as intolerance in Bandung in West Java toward a drama involving the country's past communist history; attacks by an Islamic fundamentalist group in Yogyakarta on a transgender pesantren; militarization in Poso in Central Sulawesi as a reaction to terrorism as well as sexual abuse against children and unwanted development; and land-grabbing in Papua.

At the meeting, the SOP alumni of the Interfaith Cooperation Forum (ICF) network also outlined their plans for the national forum for the next five years. These plans included conducting mini-SOPs and holding training for trainers workshops in a variety of areas—drama, writing, music, photography, videography, community organizing and issues related to development and the environment.

Other initiatives that were discussed involved creating an internship program with, for example, an SOP alumni from Jakarta working in Papua with an SOP alumni there. Exposure programs throughout the country was another idea that was proposed. Lastly, operating social enterprises is a new area of interest for the national forum, and it was suggested that they could learn from the YMCAs in South Korea which have a wealth of experience and expertise in creating and developing social enterprises.

↑ Suwarti Ningsih, ICF National Coordinator, left, explains about the activities of the National Forum in Indonesia to an interfaith gathering in Bogor during a field visit to learn about the problems a Protestant church has had for more than three years to build a church in Bogor and the support they've received from people of other faiths.

Indonesia Hosts Mini-SOP in Java Indigenous Community

From May 15 through May 25, 15 young adults from different areas of Indonesia gathered in the village of Kasepuhan Ciptagelar in the province of West Java for a mini-SOP organized by the Indonesian ICF national forum. Kasepuhan Ciptagelar is a traditional Sundanese community which maintains their ancient traditions under the rule of a young king. The king, called Father by the villagers, is a humble man who spends much of his time listening to his people and responding to their needs.

The curriculum for this mini-SOP covered such areas as identity, faith and religion, structural analysis and drama. However, the highlight of the days together was learning about traditional Sundanese life and their very close relationship to rice. For the people of this village, rice is life, and it must never be sold in any form. Many festivals are held throughout the year to honor rice and the environment which helps it grow.

Surrounding the village, three different forests exist. One is sacred, and no one can enter without permission. Trees in the second forest can be cut if needed for houses or firewood. The third forest is available to everyone for collecting food or medicinal herbs. This strict tradition has protected the environment in this area for many centuries, and it is still practiced so the future generations will also have a healthy place to live.

With the opportunity to live in the homes of the villagers, participants were exposed to the warm hospitality of the Sundanese people. Upon arrival, it was suggested that everyone take off their watches and stow them away as life here is not governed by the hour and second hand of modern life. When the sun comes up, people rise and prepare to go to their fields. When they feel hungry, they eat. It is a life regulated by the natural rhythms of nature, and there is a feeling of harmony and peace in the village.

This mini-SOP gave everyone a chance to see a new philosophy of living focused on nature, cooperation and respect for all life. As we analyze the communities and nations in which we live and struggle to envision a new and more just society, Kasepuhan Ciptagelar gives us an example. This experience was perhaps the most important lesson from these few days together.
