15. From the Desk of the General Secretary...A Shift for A New Culture of YMCA Movements

I attended the North American YMCA Development Organization (NAYDO) Conference last 5-7 April in North Carolina. NAYDO was established for introducing philanthropic culture into YMCA movement. Every year, nearly 1,000 participants of fund-raisers, CDO, CEO, and board members meet and learn the top-level practices and ideas in present situation.

In USA, over US$300 billion is raised in a year as gifts to charitable organizations. The US YMCAs have been one of the biggest receiving organizations among Non Profit sectors for the last several years. Both YMCAs in the USA and Canada have been experiencing a big shift of working in the community. This shift I believe will soon spread to many parts of the world.

This year's NAYDO gathered 39 overseas participants from 21 countries. I can say that they all felt something new ~ a different trend. The programmes and activities in the YMCAs in North America are not so much different from the past, but how they involve communities and businesses makes it different. And this new culture of YMCA has been well accepted in their communities.

I would like to share my conversation with a board member of one local YMCA from Mexico. He belongs to a small YMCA that has been receiving financial support from Mexico City YMCA. I learned that they want to build their own YMCA center to sustain their activities and this needs a huge amount of money. Without such philanthropic culture in Mexico, he was very keen on reaching the goal of raising such fund. This is just one of the examples how some centers in Mexico were built for their own sustainability. YMCA movements were shifted to become strong community service organizations. More than anything else, I felt a strong commitment and confidence among those delegates from Mexico.

YMCA is the organization of good practices in youth development as well as in community development. If we can show effectively the purpose of our work, the quality of our programmes and the impacts on youth and communities, our whole work will be much more strengthened. This is the real message of the NAYDO I got. In order to change our ways of working, we need strong, clear governance, supportive volunteers, professional skills and knowledge in fund raising, and commitment of staff and board members.

I felt strongly that this growing trend of philanthropy will be and should be absorbed to our Asia and Pacific movements. This kind of new shift could be only possible when a top leadership of each movement realizes the needs. APAY will need to facilitate more opportunities to learn the philanthropic culture in YMCA movements.
